Experiencing the Chicago World's Fair

"I'm so excited, Dad," Ruth said as she stood in line, bouncing with excitement. "The opening of the 1893 World's Fair is finally here. I was beginning to think this day would never come."

"It almost didn't, or at least not in Chicago," her dad replied. "If my boss, Lyman Gage, had not raised several million dollars in one day three years ago, the World's Fair would have been in New York."

"If the money was raised three years ago, why on earth has it taken so long to open the fair?" Ruth asked.

Her dad answered, "We thought it would only take two years, but there was a lot of work that needed to be done. There were several architects working under the direction of Frederick Law Olmsted, who designed more than 200 buildings, and that was just the start."

"Didn't Sophia Hayden design the Woman's Building?" Ruth asked. "I really want to see that building. I think it would be so cool to see a building designed by one of the first female architects."

"You have your facts right, Ruth," her dad replied. "But if the work stopped with the architects, we would just have building designs. Workers built the buildings with staff, which is a temporary building material made of plaster of Paris and hemp fiber.

"Then after the buildings went up," Ruth's dad continued, "there were 72,000 tons of exhibit materials shipped in to create over 250,000 exhibits."

"Wow!" Ruth exclaimed. "No wonder it took so long. Look, it's our turn to go into the fair! Can we go to the Ferris wheel first?"

"Sure," her dad replied. "Just stay close because I don't want to lose you in this crowd."

Ruth took her dad's hand as they fought their way through the crowd. It was loud, and the air seemed to buzz with excitement.

“Do I smell cheese?” Ruth inquired.

“You probably do,” her dad replied. “Let’s duck into this building on the way to the Ferris wheel, and I think you’ll discover where the smell is coming from.”

“This is incredible. I can’t believe what I’m seeing!” Ruth told her dad. “I have never seen such a huge block of cheese. Look, the sign says it is 11 tons—that’s a lot of cheese! It’s no wonder I could smell it from outside the building.”

“Just wait,” her dad said. “This is only one of the many exhibits. I am guessing your favorite will be the 1,500-pound chocolate statue, which is a replica of Venus de Milo.”

“Wow! That sounds even cooler than this cheese,” Ruth replied. “I wonder who gets to eat all that chocolate when this fair is over. I can’t wait to see it, but let’s head to the Ferris wheel before we look at anything else.”

“Okay,” her dad said, looking amused.

Ruth and her dad arrived at the line for the Ferris wheel. After a long wait, they joined 58 other people getting into one of the cars.

“How many people can this Ferris wheel hold?” Ruth asked.

“I have heard it holds 2,160 people,” her dad answered.

The Ferris wheel moved several times to load passengers until finally Ruth and her dad were at the top.

“This is breathtaking,” Ruth exclaimed. “It might have taken a lot of time, money, and work, but it was all worth it. This World’s Fair is amazing. I am so glad you brought me here. And how amazing to know that my dad had a part in it all. You’re the best, Dad!” And despite being surrounded by a car full of 58 other people suspended more than 250 feet in the air, Ruth reached over to give her dad a big hug.
