Weekly Test Lesson 1

Read the text. Then answer the questions.

Late to Play

Fernando yawned, stretched, and looked at the clock on his bureau. He was supposed to meet his friend Miguel at the park at 9:00, and it was already 8:15. Forty-five minutes was barely sufficient time to dress, consume breakfast, and bicycle to the park with his mother. Fernando swung his feet to the floor, but then he collapsed back on the bed. He was always lethargic first thing in the morning and had difficulty moving quickly. Maybe being a few minutes tardy was acceptable; after all, Fernando was typically late. In fact, he was virtually always delayed, so surely Miguel would not expect promptness this week.

On the other hand, Miguel was consistently early, even knowing Fernando customarily ran behind schedule. Their individual habits were as predictable as sunrise and sunset. However, Miguel had started complaining about Fernando's chronic lateness. Fernando had to acknowledge the unfairness of constantly making Miguel wait.

Fernando scrambled out of bed, determined to change his previous practices. He dressed hastily and dashed to the kitchen, where his mother had breakfast prepared, and announced his plan. If they hustled, he could arrive in advance of Miguel for the first time in their history. That would be a monumental surprise for Miguel!

Across the city, Miguel pondered his itinerary. He'd slept longer than normal, but he still had adequate time to reach the park on schedule. Besides, Fernando was persistently late, so why should Miguel hurry? He had a leisurely breakfast and washed his dishes. He even waited patiently while his teenage brother Nicolau finished a telephone call to his girlfriend. They finally departed with their dog, Chico, at 9:00. Miguel remained unconcerned while Chico loitered on the way, stopping to examine every fragment of sidewalk.

Meanwhile, at the park, Fernando scanned the area, anticipating Miguel's appearance. Fernando's mother was already conversing with friends, but Fernando had nothing to absorb his interest. He hadn't realized how tedious it was to hang around unoccupied, unable to start an activity since his friend might show up momentarily. Now he felt especially ashamed of how frequently he had made Miguel wait for him.

At 9:15, Miguel, Nicolau, and Chico entered the park and Nicolau went off to the basketball court. Miguel was astonished to see Fernando already sitting by the fountain where they usually met. Miguel approached Fernando and exclaimed, "You're early!"

Reading

“You’re late!” Fernando said simultaneously.

Miguel chuckled and said, “I decided to dawdle today, since you’re usually late. I didn’t intend to make you wait for me.”

Fernando said, “I resolved to hustle this morning, so I could be early for once. I apologize for usually making you wait for me, and I’ll try to be on time in the future.”

“That sounds fair to me,” Miguel agreed. “If we’re both punctual, we won’t squander a moment of our day together!”
