Weekly Test Lesson 9

Read the text. Then answer the questions.

Beware of the Dog!

“Since your mom has to work late today, we get to study at my house for a change,” Jorge reminded Sofia. They were walking home from school.

Sofia’s hands got clammy just thinking about going to Jorge’s house. He lived just down the street from her, so she had seen his gigantic dog racing crazily around his yard, barking his head off. If she went to Jorge’s house, Sofia just knew that dog would jump all over her and knock her flat on the ground. When that huge dog stood on his back feet, Sofia was sure that his paws would reach all the way to her shoulders!

“Well, maybe we could just stop at the park and study there for a while,” Sofia suggested. She was determined not to let Jorge know how much his dog scared her.

Shaking his head, Jorge asked, “Sofia, I don’t want to be critical, but did you notice that it’s starting to rain out here?”

“It’s only raining a little, just a little annoyance. It won’t disrupt anything!” she said, trying to sound cheerful as she pulled up the hood on her jacket.

Jorge sighed and tried again. “Why would we sit in the rain at the park when we could be dry and warm inside my house? Anyway, your mom is going to pick you up at my house, remember?”

Sofia nodded reluctantly, but she slowed her pace as they walked past her nice, safe house and headed three doors down, to where the monster dog lived.

As soon as they got close to Jorge’s house, she could hear the dog barking and making a huge commotion inside the house. Jorge grinned and yelled, “I’m coming, Charlie!”

Jorge hurried onto the front porch and opened the door. Shaking all over, Sofia stopped on the sidewalk and started to cover her eyes with her hands.

Thank goodness! Jorge’s mom stood just inside the door—with Charlie secured by a leash! Sofia took a shaky breath. His mom wouldn’t let the dog eat Sofia, would she?

“Hi, Sofia,” Jorge’s mom called. “I’ll just hold Charlie here until he settles down.”

Jorge was laughing and hugging the dog as he said, “Down, boy, stay down now.” The dog kept trying to lick Jorge’s face. A few minutes later, Sofia noticed, Charlie did start to calm down and stood quietly while Jorge petted him.

Jorge’s mom was watching Sofia and said, “Charlie is still a puppy, Sofia, so he gets really excited sometimes, but he’s a good dog. Would you like to pet him?”

“Uh, maybe later,” Sofia whispered.

“I think the rain has stopped, so let’s go in the backyard and throw a ball for Charlie, OK?” Jorge asked Sofia. “That’s what we always do when I get home.”

Sofia nodded again and followed the two of them out to the backyard, keeping a safe distance from the dog. She did notice, nervously, that Jorge’s mom had taken the leash off the dog, but Charlie seemed happy to walk beside Jorge. The dog kept looking up at him. Sofia thought maybe he was smiling.

Jorge found a beat-up tennis ball on the ground and threw it way in the back of the yard. Charlie took off happily, catching it in the air. Then the dog trotted back to Jorge, holding the ball in his mouth, and dropped it in front of him. Jorge threw the ball two more times, and Charlie rushed to retrieve it. But the fourth time that Jorge threw the ball, Charlie brought it to Sofia and dropped it at her feet. Then he looked up at her, panting, his tongue hanging out of his mouth. Was he smiling again?

“Go ahead and throw it for him, Sofia!” Jorge urged her.

Sofia picked up the ball, trying to ignore all the dog spit, and threw it as far as she could. Charlie took off in a flash, caught it in the air, and hurried back—to her!

“Looks like you have a new friend, Sofia,” Jorge said with a grin. “Are you ready to go in and study now?”

Sofia picked up the ball again. “Maybe in a few minutes. I think Charlie still wants to play,” she said with a smile. “I wonder if we could get a dog at my house.”
