On special days, they would go to the park and swing. It was their favorite thing to do. They would sit on two swings next to each other. When Angela closed her eyes, she could hear the clouds talking. They said, "Higher. Higher." When Jimmy closed his eyes, the wind talked to him. It said, "Faster. Faster."

At Angela's house one day, Angela asked for a snack. Angela's mom cut apples for them to eat. They sat outside under the tree. They read stories and ate the apples. But Angela and Jimmy wanted to go to the park. Angela asked her mom to take them there. Angela's mom was a writer. She worked at home and she had to get her writing done. Some days Angela's mom would take them to the park. Angela knew her mom was busy and could not take them to the park today. But she asked her anyway. When her mom said no, Angela asked again. Her mom said no, and Angela frowned. "Pretty please," cried Angela. Her mom was getting annoyed. "Go back outside and play," she told the children sharply. Angela felt bad for upsetting her mom.

"Hi," Angela called. "My name is Angela and this is Jimmy. Do you want to play?"

The little boy looked up and smiled. "My name is Akash," he said. "Would you like to come here and swing?"
